

The following information was provided to the ISSC on August 22, 2017 by the Washington State Department of Health:

The Washington State Department of Health, Shellfish Program is in process of conducting a recall of manila clams harvested from the Kilisut Harbor growing area due to elevated levels of PSP toxins. The PSP toxin result was 219µg/100g in manila clams collected on 8/18/17. This product made its way to locations in New York, Massachusetts, Ohio and California. The identified company regarding the recall is the Lower Elwha Klallam Tribe (WA-0587-HA). The Lower Elwha Klallam Tribe sold 700 pounds of this product to Merculand LLC (WA-1675-SS) and they have contacted all of their customers involved with this recall. We have updated the FDA regarding the recall and have begun contacting the Shellfish Authorities in New York, Massachusetts, Ohio and California. See attached table for a summary of the of the recalled manila clams.
